Introducing New D.C. Partner Morgan Ratner

“At the lectern, you stand extremely close to the justices. And they do truly want to have a conversation. So when they ask you about constitutional issues or what a statute means, it feels surreal that they are looking to you to shed some light on the case.”

Morgan Ratner

Chief Justice John G. Roberts, Jr.,
United States Supreme Court, 2013 - 2014

The Honorable Brett M. Kavanaugh,
United States Court of Appeals,
District of Columbia Circuit, 2012 - 2013

Before Morgan Ratner joined S&C, she was intrigued by the Firm's Supreme Court and Appellate practice. She knew the Firm's existing client base gave it strong growth potential. But more importantly, she was looking for a firm that was making concrete steps with regard to gender representation.

That drew her to S&C's Washington, D.C., office. Led by Managing Partner Amanda Davidoff, with an impressive roster of litigators and gender parity among its partners, Morgan knew it was the right fit.

Before joining S&C in late 2021, Morgan served in the Office of the Solicitor General at the U.S. Department of Justice and clerked for two sitting U.S. Supreme Court justices.

In fall 2022, she was asked by the Court to defend the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit's rationale in a habeas case. Morgan collaborated with a majority-women associate team that was involved in every stage of drafting and moot court prep ahead of the argument.

Though it was Morgan's ninth time arguing before the Court, she was still in awe.

"At the lectern, you stand extremely close to the justices. And they do truly want to have a conversation. So when they ask you about constitutional issues or what a statute means, it feels surreal that they are looking to you to shed some light on the case."

Morgan is excited to leverage that first-hand experience as S&C continues to grow its appellate practice, while also using it to mentor young associates. "I think it's important to combine a structural mentorship with an organic working mentorship," she says.

Recruiting Insights: Q&A With Sergio Galvis

Sergio Galvis

The Honorable Lawrence W. Pierce,
United States Court of Appeals,
Second Circuit, 1983-1984

Q&A with Sergio Galvis, General Practice Partner and Head of Legal Recruiting

You have been the head of recruiting at S&C for more than a decade and during that time, you have hired more than a thousand new lawyers, including a significant number of judicial clerks. Can you tell us a little bit about the Firm's recruiting philosophy?

Throughout our history, S&C has been a leader in the practice of law, and our fundamental recruiting philosophy has always been the same: Hire the best and brightest law students and judicial clerks, give them as much responsibility as possible early on in their careers, and develop them into well-rounded professionals who can solve our clients' most complex problems. Recruiting talented law students and clerks to join S&C is—and always has been—central to the health and long-term success of the Firm. Our approach is simple: We find the most promising legal minds and we invite them to pursue their careers at S&C. The people to whom we make offers will have many choices and a short window for decision-making, so our partners, associates and recruiting staff across all of our offices are deeply focused on this effort.

What should judicial clerks who are interviewing with S&C expect during the interview process?

Whenever possible, we strongly prefer to meet with candidates in-person, in one of our offices. S&C's approach to our work with clients is highly team-oriented and collaborative. The same is true on the recruiting front. Our interview format provides interested clerks with significant exposure to our lawyers and allows them to see how partners and associates interact and engage with one another. It is our goal to provide a highly personalized interview experience that focuses on the interests and professional goals of each candidate. Ideally, it will be more than an interview; it will be an opportunity for a meaningful discussion of each clerk's professional aspirations. During each interview, clerks can expect to meet with both partners and associates and often will join our lawyers for lunch or dinner or receptions we host during the clerkship recruiting season.

At the beginning of your career, you clerked on the Second Circuit for The Honorable Lawrence W. Pierce, United States Court of Appeals. Can you tell us how that experience helped to prepare you for success at the Firm?

One of the hallmarks of an experienced S&C lawyer is a breadth of perspective and the ability to work effectively in a range of substantive areas. Although I am principally a deal lawyer, I work on an almost-daily basis with our litigators. The training from my clerkship dovetails exceedingly well with our generalist, multidisciplinary practice. Judge Pierce was an exceptional teacher who not only encouraged me but also challenged me to do my best work. I quickly found many like-minded mentors at the Firm who were invested in my development, and I have taken a similar approach when working with our younger colleagues. The one-on-one mentorship model is alive and well at S&C and judicial clerks thrive here for precisely that reason.

Do you have any final words of advice for judicial clerks who will be interviewing with the Firm?

Do your best to familiarize yourself with S&C, our practice and the work that we do. It's important to give some thought to the generalist multidisciplinary approach and whether this appeals to you as it is central to the way we develop lawyers at the Firm. In addition to some basic advanced preparation, the most important thing you can do is to be authentic. We want to get to know you and for you to get to know us.

Leading Litigators: Criminal Defense & Investigations

S&C's award-winning Criminal Defense & Investigations Group (CDIG) is led by a team of lawyers, many of whom are former clerks. Below, six of those leaders share what they love about working on this team.

“ Our CDIG lawyers have played a leading role in virtually every major enforcement initiative over the past 20 years. The practice promises deep engagement in high-stakes matters, working with a talented and collegial team, including many lawyers who have held senior positions across government.”

— Steve Peikin, New York office

The Honorable J. Edward Lumbard, United States Court of Appeals, Second Circuit, 1992 - 1993
The Honorable Robert P. Patterson, Jr., United States District Court, Southern District of New York, 1991 - 1992

“ Our Criminal Defense & Investigations Group not only brings deep experience in handling investigations of all kinds and across sectors, but helps our clients see and solve the broader strategic issues that arise from the investigations.”

— Tony Lewis, Los Angeles office

The Honorable Pamela Rymer, United States Court of Appeals, Ninth Circuit, 2003 - 2004

“S&C’s CDIG team is unparalleled in terms of the quality and complexity of our client matters and the talent of the lawyers involved. Having the opportunity to work with such thoughtful and engaging colleagues—who are also pretty wonderful people—has been important to my development as a lawyer and is the main reason that I chose S&C.”

— Kamil Shields, Washington, D.C., office

The Honorable Barrington D. Parker,
United States Court of Appeals, Second Circuit,
2007 - 2008
The Honorable Richard W. Roberts,
United States District Court, District of Columbia,
2006 - 2007

“I have been blessed to work with a fantastic team at S&C on CDIG matters. I continue to learn from my CDIG colleagues as we handle cutting-edge investigations that are among the most significant criminal and enforcement matters across a wide variety of industries and jurisdictions. The multinational aspect of many of our investigations has been particularly interesting to me over my career.”

— Karen Seymour, New York office

“I joined S&C’s Criminal Defense & Investigations Group for the chance to work on exciting, high-profile investigations. I stayed for the camaraderie and friendships that develop when working with colleagues across practice groups on our clients’ highest-stakes matters.”

— Nic Bourtin, Managing Partner of the Criminal Defense & Investigations Group, New York office

The Honorable Federico A. Moreno,
United States District Court, Southern District of Florida, 1997 - 1998

“When I was leaving government, one thing that drew me to S&C was the opportunity to handle complex matters that require an interdisciplinary approach. In CDIG, our work is cross-office, touches multiple areas of the law and is very team-oriented, which I enjoy. It sharpens the analysis, leads to better advice and makes the work more meaningful and fun.”

A Massive Arbitration Win

When longtime S&C client Bayer faced a multibillion-dollar dispute with BASF, the company turned to litigation partners Dustin Guzior, Steve Holley and Rick Pepperman. The resulting victory before an International Chamber of Commerce tribunal drew industry-wide attention, with The American Lawyer honoring the trio as “Litigators of the Week.” Dustin was also recently recognized as one of Law360’s “Rising Stars” and has been named to the National LGBT Bar Association & Foundation’s “Best LGBTQ+ Lawyers Under 40.”

Convinced they could present a more compelling case face-to-face, the team persuaded the tribunal to hold in-person proceedings in Frankfurt, Germany at a time when nearly all international arbitrations were being conducted remotely due to COVID-19. After two weeks of hearings, in which 16 fact witnesses and four experts testified, they defeated BASF’s claims that Bayer had failed to disclose certain costs when Bayer sold parts of its crops sciences business to BASF for €7.4 billion. In this excerpt from their American Lawyer interview, Dustin, Steve and Rick described the experience and explained how their courtroom trial experience gave them an edge in this arbitration forum.

“Depositions almost never happen in international arbitration, but we put forward a cogent explanation for why we needed to interview our adversary’s employees—and got the interviews. Similarly, our cross-examination style was a bit more pointed and aggressive [than in most arbitrations], but it paid off.”
— Dustin Guzior

“What I will remember most about the case is working collaboratively with the whole team—partners, associates and paralegals—in our ‘war rooms’ in Düsseldorf and Frankfurt. It was the first time we could all be together because of COVID-19, and I was reminded how much can be accomplished in a short time when smart lawyers are all in the same room, exchanging ideas in real time.”

— Steve Holley

The Honorable Jose A. Cabranes,

“Given the nature of the allegations, we strongly believed that it was important to test the witnesses’ testimony with live cross examination. The live hearing also enabled the arbitrators to assess better the witnesses’ credibility. The team felt strongly about this point, and the intuition ended up being correct.”

S&C STORIES

Mentoring the Next Generation

Guiding the next generation of lawyers through mentorship is a hallmark of training across all of our offices. Here, three mentor-mentee pairs from New York, Los Angeles and Palo Alto reflect on what these relationships mean to them.

NEW YORK

“ At S&C, each generation mentors the next. Successful mentoring is critical to the Firm’s future success. In law school, you learn the basic building blocks of lawyering. My S&C mentors taught me how to practice law by watching them in court, revising my briefs and helping me to learn by doing. I’m now passing those lessons on to our next generation of lawyers. I get great satisfaction out of serving as a resource and a role model for Casey, whom I’ve mentored since his days as a summer associate. Our offices are close by and we speak almost every day.”

— Bob Giuffra, Co-Chair

Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist,
United States Supreme Court, 1988 - 1989

The Honorable Ralph K. Winter, United States Court of Appeals, Second Circuit,
1987 - 1988

“ To me, mentorship is an irreplaceable relationship in life grounded on friendship, trust, care, mutual respect and common goals. As my mentor, Bob edifies me through constant teaching, encourages me to pursue success with tenacity and enthusiasm and his door is always open for advice and counsel. He helps me be the best lawyer and person I can be.”

— Casey Dennis, Litigation Associate

United States Court of Appeals, Third Circuit,
2020 - 2021

The Honorable Sidney H. Stein, United States
District Court, Southern District of New York,
2019 - 2020

PALO ALTO

“To this day, I regularly consult with colleagues about the right approach to a problem because even now, more than 25 years in, I encounter issues I’ve never seen before. Being available for colleagues’ questions is every bit as important. If Lex is confronting a situation that she needs to consult on, that’s because it is difficult. Maybe I’ve been there before, maybe I haven’t, but helping her work through it not only gives her the tools she needs to solve the issue, it also teaches me a thing or two. This sort of give-and-take is as much a part of this job as reading cases, writing briefs or anything else we do. It’s also the best part.”

—Brendan Cullen, Litigation Partner

The Honorable Clarence Thomas, United States Supreme Court, 1996 - 1997
The Honorable Laurence H. Silberman, United States Court of Appeals, District of Columbia Circuit, 1995 - 1996

“A mentor-mentee relationship is invaluable because it creates a safe space for growth and counsel. It’s where candid discussions occur. It’s where the mentee gets to shadow the mentor. And it’s where true friendship develops. I am fortunate to have worked closely with and learned from multiple accomplished S&C lawyers, each of whom has mentored me from time to time. And I’m a better lawyer and leader as a result. But the safe space lies with Brendan. His mentorship is why I’m still here.”

S&C STORIES: MENTORING THE NEXT GENERATION

LOS ANGELES

“ To me, the best mentoring relationship is one where the roles of mentor and mentee are fluid, but both are dedicated to making the relationship a success. One person in the relationship may have more experience and may be the more natural mentor, but we all need someone to help us see that we have the talent and ability to achieve certain things. We all need help sometimes to bring it out of us.”

—Diane McGimsey, Litigation Partner

The Honorable Clarence Thomas, United States Supreme Court, 2003 - 2004

The Honorable J. Harvie Wilkinson III, United States Court of Appeals, Fourth Circuit, 2002 - 2003

“ In my experience, a valuable mentoring relationship takes time to develop; with the building of trust, credibility and mutual respect. Thanks to this foundation, my mentor, Diane, has helped and encouraged me to step outside my comfort zone and grow both personally and professionally.”

Innovating for Infrastructure

Chris Mann

The Honorable Ralph K. Winter,
United States Court of Appeals,
Second Circuit, 1989 - 1990

Working at the cutting edge of infrastructure is where you'll find partner Chris Mann. In 2022, he advised Electrify America, the largest open, ultra-fast electric vehicle charging network in North America, as it raised $450 million from Siemens. The deal valued Electrify America at $2.45 billion, along with new capital from founding parent Volkswagen Group. As a result, North America is one step closer to convenient, reliable and affordable electric vehicle charging.

"Infrastructure work aligns with S&C's generalist model, because so many different skills are needed," says Chris, who coordinates S&C's global infrastructure practice and clerked on the Second Circuit for the late Judge Ralph K. Winter. "Clerking for an appeals court judge involved digging into many areas of law. That is ideal training for S&C's generalist practice, because it builds comfort with taking on unfamiliar challenges. It's what makes law clerks so well suited to our practice."

Chris was drawn to corporate work as a summer associate because he wanted to help create value. His career has involved helping to build and enhance toll roads, airports, rail tunnels, ports, digital infrastructure and renewable energy assets.

S&C's generalist model has allowed Chris to work on a wide array of other matters, including mergers and acquisitions, project financings, sovereign financings and restructurings, and, as co-head of the Firm's Committee on Foreign Investment in the United States practice, foreign investment regulatory advice. "My work crosses a wide array of disciplines. That is very challenging and satisfying, especially when the result helps people live their lives more efficiently."

Associate Reflections from D.C.: One Year at S&C

In 2021, the Firm's Washington, D.C., office added three clerks from the 2020 Supreme Court Term to the Litigation Group: Leslie Arffa, Zoe Jacoby and Dan Richardson. We caught up with them to hear what life as an S&C lawyer has been like and what advice they'd give to clerks deciding which firm to join.

“The mentorship and breadth of experiences has stood out to me. I've worked on a wide range of cases and gotten to know a number of people at the Firm incredibly well over the past year. I advise clerks to choose a firm where you're excited about the people you'll be working with because it's the relationships that make S&C such a great place to be.”

“What stands out for me is the responsibility and trust placed in associates, even in significant matters. I’ve developed litigation strategies, drafted high-stakes briefs, second-chaired an appellate argument and participated in client pitches. My advice to clerks: Pick a firm that will give you opportunities and responsibility, with mentorship and guidance along the way.”

Kiran K. Mahal
Chief Justice Richard Wagner,
Supreme Court of Canada, 2019 - 2020
Court of Appeal for Ontario, 2018 - 2019

Kiran Mahal and Marie-Ève Plamondon can attest that a clerkship at the Supreme Court of Canada is not only welcomed at S&C, it is highly valued.

With 13 offices worldwide, the Firm is known for handling complex cross-border and multi-jurisdictional disputes. Many nationalities are represented among our bench, including dozens of Canadian lawyers.

“That built-in network is key—in terms of having mentors as you transition to U.S. law, but also from a cultural standpoint,” says Kiran.

Marie-Ève agrees, adding, “It’s great to have colleagues who understand the Canadian viewpoint available to help shape how you think about U.S. law.”

After completing clerkships at the Federal Court of Appeal and the Supreme Court of Canada, Marie-Ève was undecided between practicing in Toronto or New York, until S&C put her in touch with current and former Canadian associates.

“They all spoke about the meaningful work they had done, such as taking on significant responsibility on pro bono matters. Most importantly, they praised what a great community it was,” Marie-Ève says.

Kiran, who was a summer associate and clerked at both the Supreme Court of Canada and Court of Appeal for Ontario before re-joining the Firm, noted that her clerkship experience helped her get acclimated quickly as a lawyer in New York.

“As a clerk, I learned the importance of clear and concise legal writing and how to distill complex research, arguments and facts into an accessible format,” says Kiran. “That experience has been directly transferable to my day-to-day work as a litigation associate and critical to my growth.”

From the U.S. Supreme Court to S&C

Max Gottschall was lucky enough to clerk for three different judges before joining S&C as a litigation associate. Below he shares some of the lessons he's learned and why he chose S&C.

What made you decide to join S&C in New York?

I had three criteria in my search. First, because I had worked only in D.C., I wanted to work where I'd be exposed to all different kinds of "New York legal market" matters and not be pigeonholed into one or two discrete areas of practice. Second, because of my ties there, I also wanted a firm with a significant presence in Washington. And finally, I wanted to work with the absolute best litigators. Thus, S&C was an easy choice.

What was it like clerking for the Supreme Court?

One thing that's intimidating about clerking on the Supreme Court is that, in even the highest-profile cases, it's just you, your co-clerks and the justice working on it. You learn how to deal with that responsibility, how to summon the necessary confidence and balance it with humility. Those lessons will serve me well in earning our clients' trust.

How has clerking prepared you for your work at S&C?

Clerking provides a glimpse into how judges decide cases in real time. I was immensely privileged to have that experience with three different judges, each of whom brought their own unique perspectives and approaches. I learned so many lessons on life and lawyering from each of them—too many to recount here.

Developing Through Pro Bono

Pro bono work has been integral to Trevor Chenoweth's associate experience.

In his first month at S&C, he advised on a successful petition to seal the criminal record of a young woman who had pleaded guilty to a non-violent felony and who faced employment and education obstacles because of her record. Later, acting as a special assistant district attorney, he successfully defended a homicide conviction and 23-year sentence, delivering the oral argument before a four-judge panel.

More recently, Trevor helped defend a criminal case in the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of New York, which included submitting a petition for certiorari to the Supreme Court. After the defendant pleaded guilty, Trevor helped argue for a fair sentence considering the punishing conditions his client endured in a federal detention center during the height of the COVID-19 pandemic.

"We successfully convinced the judge that our client had endured more than enough imprisonment and that he was now a changed man. He walked into court as a criminal defendant and detainee, and he walked out that same day to rejoin his family with a sentence of time served," Trevor recalled.

Trevor recognizes the connection between his experiences as a clerk and his passion for pro bono work. "There's a significant service component to clerking," he explains. "You feel good about serving the country and the people who rely on the legal system. Working on pro bono cases has allowed me to further justice across both sides of the aisle."

Alumni Pathways: USAO

“I’ve always wanted to be a federal prosecutor. I know S&C has prepared me well for it.”

Dylan Aluise

The Honorable Naomi Reice Buchwald,
United States District Court,
Southern District of New York, 2020 - 2021

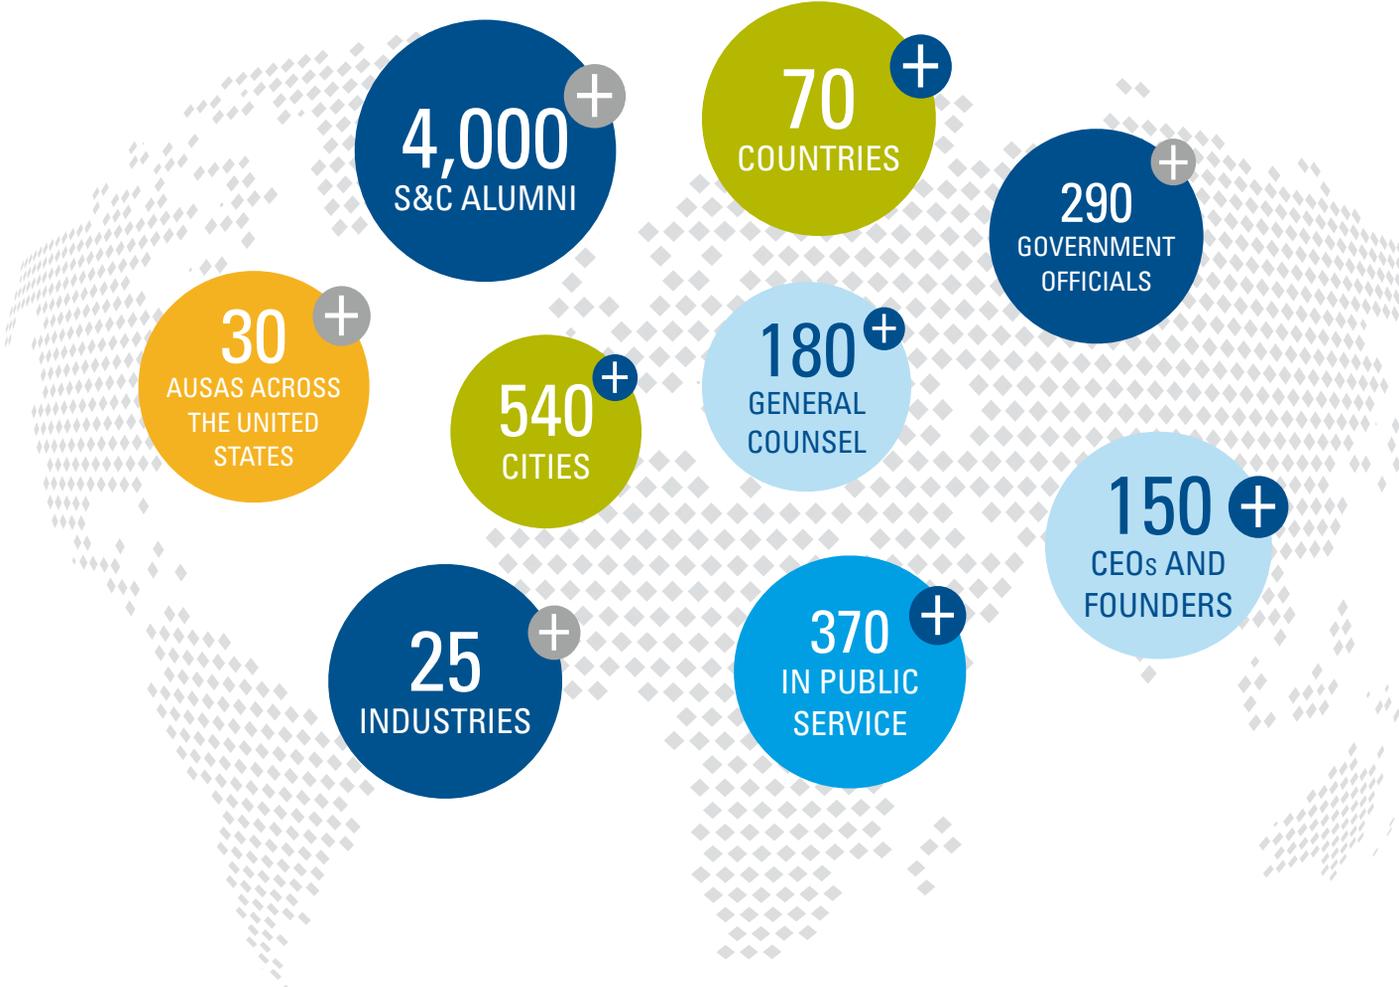

“It’s amazing to see what our lawyers go on to do after S&C,” says Nicole Weber. As leader of S&C’s alumni program and career resource center, Nicole is in touch daily with this talented community. “Some go in-house at startups and banks, others become professors or judges, or switch careers entirely. There’s always interest in positions with government agencies, such as the Offices of the United States Attorneys.”

A significant number of S&C lawyers are accepted for these prestigious roles. For example, Jessica Ecker, who as an associate was featured in last year’s brochure, joined S&C in 2019 following her clerkships. Early on, she expressed interest in being a federal prosecutor. Partner Nic Bourtin (see page 9), who served as an Assistant United States Attorney in the Eastern District of New York from 2001 to 2005, mentored her in her effort to realize this dream. She is now serving as an Assistant United States Attorney in the District of New Jersey.

Similarly, Special Counsel Andrew DiFilippis recently re-joined S&C after nearly a decade as an Assistant United States Attorney in the Southern District of New York. He served as a senior member of the National Security and International Narcotics Unit and routinely briefed the United States Attorney General and other senior Department of Justice officials, and coordinated with the Federal Bureau of Investigation, Central Intelligence Agency, State Department and other parts of the federal government.

Joining a United States Attorneys Office was also a dream for associate Dylan Aluise, who started in the District of Columbia in January. “I’ve always wanted to be a federal prosecutor,” he said. “I know S&C has prepared me well for it.”
